Deutsche Telekom's subsidiary T-Mobile International AG and mmO2 agreed to the contractual terms of an agreement to cooperate on building UMTS networks. This follows the signing in June of the Memoranda of Understanding between the two companies. There have been thorough negotiations over the past few months, in which both companies have been clarifying the operating, technical and commercial details of the agreement. The cooperation might lead to positive financial effects of up to 30 percent from the estimated costs of building the UMTS networks.

Issuer's information/explanatory remarks concerning this ad-hoc-announcement:

Kai-Uwe Ricke, member of the board of Deutsche Telekom and chief executive officer of T-Mobile International AG, underlined the importance for mobile markets in Germany and the UK: "These are the first international agreements of this kind and it's an important step for the future." The rapid conclusion of the negotiations, he said, emphasises how important it was for both parties to transform their initial memorandum of understanding swiftly into a binding contract. Now both companies, together with their subsidiaries in Germany and the UK, T-Mobil and One 2 One, can proceed "to realize a swift, and more cost-effective construction of their UMTS networks in the two largest mobile markets in Europe."
